$3M CLASS ACTION DISMISSED

There is a difference between speculation and evidence

The defendant city had been involved in a long and costly legal battle with four citizens over their demand for changes in a servitude (a restriction in the use of real property). The plaintiff in the class action, also a citizen, alleged that the city was conducting a vendetta against the four applicants, said vendetta that was not in the interest of citizens and that the city was not acting according to the Cities and Towns Act. The plaintiff's failure to demonstrate an apparent right in the remedy that he sought constituted failure to meet an essential condition for a class action. Appeal dismissed summarily. ◆

INTENTIONAL INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONSHIP, DEFAMATION, INTENTIONAL INFLICTION OF EMOTIONAL DISTRESS

Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction under First Amendment

The plaintiff was the former executive director of a religious state convention that works in conjunction with another board within a particular religious denomination. The plaintiff was terminated from his employment and sued the religious board, alleging it caused the termination and has otherwise wronged the plaintiff. The religious board initially moved to dismiss under the ministerial exception of the First Amendment, but it was denied in light of the plaintiff not being the religious board's direct employee. The religious board subsequently moved for partial summary judgment, which resulted in the district court issuing a show cause order asking the parties to brief whether the Court has subject matter jurisdiction. In its submission, the religious board demonstrated that the ecclesiastical abstention doctrine precludes the Court from hearing any of the claims because it would require the Court to impermissibly interfere with the internal affairs of a religious organization. Agreeing with the religious board's position, the district court dismissed all of the plaintiff's claims with prejudice. The matter is currently on appeal to the Fifth Circuit. ◆

ACTION ON A PROMISSORY NOTE

Recovery on Promissory Note Reduced by Millions

A real estate developer borrowed $1.5 Million from his business partner and signed a promissory note requiring monthly interest-only payments at 10% interest. Defendant made payments for the first few months and then stopped. The two partners were involved in a number of real estate projects together over the years. Their joint deals ended poorly primarily because of the 2008 recession, and the Plaintiff sued on the note. Defendant raised a number of offset defenses related to the parties' prior business dealings. The Jury agreed with the offsets and Defendant's expert accounting analysis, which allocated the offsets against principal as they were incurred, and awarded Plaintiff just slightly more than $1.4 Million, substantially less than the principal balance on the loan in default for over 10 years. The Final Judgment was for less than one-half of the total amount due based on the face of the Note. ◆

Serious Internal Injuries Lobster Roll Case

Defense recently obtained Summary Judgment in a Negligence and Breach of Warranty case. The plaintiff alleged that he sustained serious internal injuries when he ingested a lobster shell fragment within a lobster roll sold at a McDonald's restaurant, and brought claims against the franchisee, and all possible distributors and suppliers of the lobster meat. The court entered summary judgment on the grounds that, inter alia, the plaintiff had no reasonable expectation of proving causation because more than one supplier provided lobster meat to the subject McDonald's during July 2015, and the plaintiff consumed multiple lobster rolls in that same time frame. The Court dismissed the request by the plaintiff to apply the "alternative liability" theory. ◆

TRADE SECRET MISAPPROPRIATION AGAINST SOFTWARE DEVELOPER

No Misappropriation or Interference Despite Software Developer's Plans to Develop Competing System and Pursue Clients

Plaintiff, a national university student loan servicing company, filed suit in the U.S. District Court of Oregon against a software development company and the individual software developer that had developed plaintiff's loan servicing platform. Plaintiff alleged misappropriation of plaintiff's trade secrets and intentional interference with plaintiff's clients. Although plaintiff had been working with both the software development company and the individual developer for twenty years, the parties' initial contract and all extensions had expired, and it was unclear who owned certain components of the platform. Shortly before the lawsuit, plaintiff was acquired by a multinational conglomerate which decided to play hardball and claimed ownership of the entire system. The individual developer left the software development company and, several months later, sent an email to plaintiff entitled "Some Much Needed Competition," setting out his plan to develop a competing system using newer, modern technologies (i.e. Linux-based system utilizing cloud storage, micro-sharding, and newer programming languages). He also expressed his intent to pursue plaintiff's biggest clients but was kind enough to ask if plaintiff had any objections. Two weeks later, the developer was served with the federal complaint and a motion for a temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction.

Plaintiff alleged that the developer and his former employer intentionally misappropriated plaintiff's proprietary software and plaintiff's highly confidential list of university clients and contact persons that plaintiff had spent decades developing. Plaintiff sought permanent injunctive relief regarding the developer's proposed new system, damages of not less than $1,000,000, punitive damages, plus fees and costs. The case was aggressively prosecuted by a large Washington D.C. law firm (which reportedly incurred over fees of over $1,000,000) and went to a two-week jury trial less than one year after being filed. Michael Farrell tried the case for the individual developer.

Upon plaintiff's motion for terminating sanctions, the U.S. District Court judge found that, during discovery, the individual developer had intentionally destroyed documents that he had taken with him when left his employment. The judge did not, however, issue the terminating sanction of striking the developer's answer as requested, but instead issued an adverse inference jury instruction under which the jury could presume that the documents destroyed by the developer were unfavorable to him. Nevertheless, the jury returned a unanimous defense verdict for the developer and his former employer. ◆

EDUCATION CASE INVOLVING VIOLATION OF CONSTITUTION AND STATUTORY RIGHTS

No Statutory or Constitutional Violations Found for Including Islam in History Class Curriculum

On October 15, 2019 the Supreme Court denied certiorari in a case in which a student and her parents, represented by the Thomas More Law Center, filed suit against the county school board, the Principal of the high school and the Assistant Principal, asserting claims for violation of the Establishment Clause and Free Speech Clause of the First Amendment of the United States Constitution, violation of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, and Article 36 of the Maryland Declaration of Rights. In short, Plaintiffs alleged that the board's World History curriculum endorsed Islam, that the Defendants forced the student to profess faith in Islam (it did not), and that the Defendants retaliated against the student's father for his online speech opposing the aforementioned offenses by issuing him a "no trespass" letter banning him from the school grounds after he made what could reasonably be viewed as threatening remarks. The Board and individual defendants prevailed in the United States District Court and again at the Fourth Circuit. The Plaintiffs then petitioned for certiorari at the Supreme Court, and the Court directed the filing of an opposition brief, which ultimately prevailed. ◆

Public School Didn't Fail

On October 7, 2019 the U.S. Supreme Court denied certiorari in a case where the parents of a special education student attending public school asserted a claim under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act alleging a failure to provide a free appropriate public education as required by the Act. The parents requested public funding of a private educational placement which would cost approximately $60,000 per year. In addition, the parents sought to recover their legal fees which exceed $500,000.00. The school board prevailed at the administrative hearing in this matter, on petition for judicial review in U.S. District Court, and on appeal to the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals. The parents then petitioned the Supreme Court to hear the matter, and the Court directed the filing of an opposition brief – which ultimately carried the day. ◆

CONSTRUCTION DEFECT, TRESPASS AND NUISANCE CLAIM

Plaintiffs' complaints of damages not enough to prove liability

Plaintiffs owned property next to a commercial development project constructed by the general contractor Defendant. Plaintiffs focused on alleged damages and complaints of trespass and nuisance but failed to prove how the general contractor's work proximately caused the alleged damages. Plaintiffs' experts also failed to take into consideration another large construction project taking place at the same time across the street, which may have been the cause of the alleged damages. At the summary judgment hearing, the Court agreed that Plaintiffs had not raised a genuine issue of material fact and granted Defendant's summary judgment, which is on appeal at this time. ◆

DEFECTIVE CONSTRUCTION OF A RETAINING WALL

Wall Properly Constructed

The firm's client was an out-of-state construction company that specialized in retaining walls. The homeowners alleged that the retaining wall built by the client failed within three months of being built and put the entire house at risk. The lawsuit was filed in the county where the homeowner/plaintiff lived. At trial, the plaintiff presented an engineering expert who criticized various aspects of the design of the wall. An additional expert opined that significant grading work was required to fix the slope- which should have been done by Mr. Turner's client. Inconsistencies in some of the engineering drawings were blamed for the slope being more steep than what was stated in the contract, which resulted in the failure.

Mr. Turner countered with his own expert, and leader in the construction of MSE walls, who explained why the wall was properly constructed. One of the keys to winning the case was the consistency of the defense witnesses who were able to take a complicated geotechnical engineering problem and make a clear presentation to the jury.

RESULT: Even though the case had been in litigation for six years, but it took the jury less than 60 minutes to return a complete verdict for the defense. The insurance carrier for the construction company awarded Mr. Turner its "golden gavel award" for this courtroom victory. ◆

NEGLIGENT MAINTENANCE

Fifth Circuit Affirms Summary Judgment in favor of Defendants

The Defendants were a U.S. distributor of construction hoists and a former rental company that would rent the construction hoists distributed to it. During 2013 and 2014, the rental company rented a construction hoist for use at the Kemper County Power Plant in Kemper County, Mississippi. Plaintiff was an elevator operator at the Kemper Plant and allegedly operated the construction hoist. Plaintiff claimed that while operating the hoist, the rear door suddenly and without warning free fell directly onto her head, causing her injury.

Plaintiff filed suit in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi, Northern Division, claiming negligent maintenance of the hoist. After extensive discovery, Defendants moved for summary judgment. One day before the pretrial conference and 2 ½ weeks before trial, the court granted Defendants' motion and dismissed the case with prejudice. The plaintiff appealed. UNPAID WAGE CLAIMS BY GROUP OF FORMER EMPLOYEES

Unpaid wage claims rejected because employees paid as agreed

Multiple former employees filed suit against former employer alleging unpaid wages under state wage payment and collection act, seeking upwards of six figures each in back pay and attorney's fees. Employer defended by showing that the employment agreements provided that employees were to be paid salaries and had received all salaries and benefits they were owed. Despite appearing to masquerade as an FLSA claim for overtime wages, much of which was for wages not recoverable on statute of limitations grounds, the court held that even under the wage payment act the claims could not proceed to trial. The undisputed evidence showed the employees had agreed and accepted to be paid salaries. EMPLOYMENT LAW

ADA and Age Discrimination claims dismissed against municipal defendant

Plaintiff, a 20+ year lawyer with the Office of Legal Affairs, had filed a Complaint against his employer, a municipality, and the Director of the Office of Legal Affairs, individually and in her professional capacity, alleging among other things, violations of 42 U.S.C. section 1983, the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990, the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, and New York State Human Rights Law. Plaintiff alleged that the defendants, his boss and employer, humiliated and embarrassed him in front of his co-workers because of his age and alleged mental health disability, and otherwise discriminated against him by trying to force him out of his job. The Complaint sought compensatory damages, costs, and attorney's fees.

The U.S. Second Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the decision of the U.S. District Court, Western District of New York, which granted Defendants' motion to dismiss due to Plaintiff's failure to timely serve Defendants with process. Plaintiff, represented by counsel, relied on state law which allows 120 days after filing the complaint to serve it on the defendants, rather than federal law which is only 90 days. Plaintiff served Defendants fifteen (15) days after the 90-day service period expired. Due to the extremely short statute of limitations imposed on employment discrimination claims, the statute of limitations expired shortly after Plaintiff served Defendants with process, and thus if the Complaint were dismissed, Plaintiff would be time barred from refiling his claims—which is a loss of a substantial right. Despite this, the Western District Court engaged in an extensive analysis and found that negligence of counsel/law office failure, without an independent good cause reason, is insufficient to persuade the Court to allow Plaintiff an extension of time to serve his Complaint. PREMISES LIABILITY; NEGLIGENCE; CHEMICAL EXPOSURE INJURIES TO EMPLOYEE; APPLICATION OF EXCEPTIONS TO WORKERS COMPENSATION EXCLUSIVITY RULES

Employee plaintiff seeking additional damages ruled no exception to Workers Comp exclusivity

Plaintiff age 24, a barista at Starbucks, went to the Starbucks he worked at in Mountain View, on his day off. He went to the bathroom and observed a sewage overflow and reported it to the store supervisor, who asked him to clock in and assist with stopping the sewage. Plaintiff and other employees threw towels down onto the sewage water to try and stop it spreading into the front of the store. Plumbers were called to fix the sewage issue and cleaned the store with bleach they had brought with them. Plaintiff claimed he and the other employees were then asked to complete the usual store closing procedures. Plaintiff claimed he cleaned the floors with the standard floor cleaning solution, under the direction of the store management.

Plaintiff claimed the combination of the bleach used by the plumbers and the store's floor cleaning solution reacted and caused him to be exposed to toxic chemicals and a toxic gas was created. Plaintiff claimed he was injured and took a leave of absence to recover, but that he was terminated from his employment while on the leave during the month he was undergoing medical treatment for his alleged injuries. Plaintiff made a workers' compensation claim as a result of the incident and received workers' compensation benefits including medical treatment. Plaintiff then sued Starbucks and the store manager.

Plaintiff's counsel alleged claims of exceptions to workers compensation exclusivity including fraudulent concealment pursuant to Labor Code section 3602(b)(2); premises liability under the dual capacity doctrine; and retaliation pursuant to section Labor Code section 1102.5.

Defendants' counsel contended that Plaintiff's lawsuit was barred by the workers' compensation rule of exclusivity. Defense counsel contended Plaintiff voluntarily resigned from employment and could not prove that he was discharged. Through motions in limine, defendants excluded from evidence plaintiff's expert's opinions as to the dangerousness of the cleaning chemicals used by the plaintiff. Defendants excluded plaintiff's industrial hygiene expert's opinion that Plaintiff was working in a "toxic chlorine gas" as a result of the reaction between the floor cleaning chemical being used by Plaintiff, and bleach used by a plumber. Defendants relied on the case of Sargon Enterprises, Inc. v. University of Southern Cal. (2012) 55 Cal. 4th 747 to exclude this expert's testimony as inadmissible because it was based on speculation and conjecture.

At the close of plaintiff's case after seven days of trial, defendants moved for nonsuit pursuant to C.C.P. 581c. The defendants argued that there was insufficient evidence that would permit or allow the jury to find some of the necessary elements for each of the plaintiff's three causes of action. Defense counsel contended there was no direct evidence regarding several of the necessary elements, and additionally there was no indirect evidence from which a permissible inference could be drawn.

Plaintiff claimed chemical burn injuries including lung damage and irritation to chemicals. He sought recovery for his past and future pain and suffering, past and future medicals and future lost earnings.

Plaintiff also sought punitive damages for the defendants' alleged conduct.

Defense counsel also contended Burger suffered no injury as a result of his exposure to sewage water or the bleach used by the plumbers and there was no chemical reaction between the bleach and the store floor cleaner and that Plaintiff had no damages because of this alleged exposure.

Defendants Motion for Summary Judgment had been denied prior to trial. Plaintiff's demand was $750K. Defendants served a CCP 998 statutory offer of $7.5K. Defendants filed a cost bill in excess of $100K based on the successful statutory offer. Plaintiff appealed the Judgment entered against him. Defendants obtained a Judgment against Plaintiff for $43K. Plaintiff agreed to waive his appeal rights in exchange for Defendants not seeking to execute against the Judgment. ◆

INSURANCE COVERAGE DECLARATORY JUDGMENT ACTION

Ignorance of the law is neither an excuse nor an "occurrence"

Insured towing company sought defense and indemnity coverage for an underlying lawsuit brought by the State of Washington alleging that the insured unlawfully sold vehicles belonging to active duty servicemembers to satisfy storage liens after the vehicles were impounded. The insurer commenced a declaratory judgment action to resolve the question of coverage. The insurer argued that the sale of a vehicle to satisfy a storage lien is an intentional act and the alleged injury to the vehicles and/or their active duty owners was not covered because it was not caused by accidental conduct constituting an "occurrence." The insured argued that while selling the vehicles may have been intentional, the resulting harm was "accidental" because the insured did not know about the applicable law and, thus, did not realize the sale of vehicles owned by active duty servicemembers was wrongful. The Western District of Washington, Judge Leighton, rejected the company's mistake of law defense and ruled that because it acted intentionally in selling impounded vehicles at auction, where doing so foreseeably deprives the owner of possession, there was no accident or "occurrence" to trigger coverage. The insurer's motion for summary judgment was granted as to the duty to defend and to indemnify. No appeal was taken. ◆

CONSTRUCTION – INSURANCE COVERAGE

No Coverage for Defective Work

In this case, an insurance carrier had initially provided a defense to its insured, a construction company, when a lawsuit was filed against it alleging defective construction. It was later determined that no coverage existed for the claims, and the defense was withdrawn. The underlying claim was arbitrated and resulted in a judgment against the insured for faulty construction. The insured then sought reimbursement for defense costs and indemnity of the adverse judgment from the carrier.

After the trial court entered judgment requiring the carrier to pay both the arbitration and reimburse the entire cost of the litigation, Mr. Turner was hired to handle the coverage appeal. At the heart of the case was whether the arbitration award included any damages that were the result of an "occurrence." In AL, the defective work itself is not considered an "occurrence", but any resulting damages trigger coverage. The arbitration award was vaguely written, which created the "occurrence" issue.

RESULT: The AL Supreme Court reversed the trial court and remanded the case for the trial court to enter judgment in favor of Mr. Turner's client. Interestingly, the Appellate Court relied on one of Mr. Turner's prior successful appeals, Town & Country Ford v. Amerisure Insurance Company, 111 So.3d 699 (Ala. 2011) to support its decision in favor of his client in this case. ◆

INSURANCE COVERAGE

No Coverage Under CGL Policy for Garage-Related Injury

A truck driver sued an insured that operated a truck stop, which included a hotel, garage, restaurant and gas station. The truck driver brought his truck to the garage in order to have a tire repaired. The insured's employee removed the tire from the truck, placed the tire in a safety cage, and began inflating the tire. The truck driver was standing in the garage repair area while the tire being inflated and was injured when the tire exploded. The truck driver sued the truck stop for bodily injuries based upon theories of negligent inflation of the tire and premises liability. The truck stop's CGL insurer denied coverage for the truck driver's bodily injury lawsuit against the insured. The Supreme Court of VA upheld the CGL insurer's denial of coverage based upon the standard auto exclusion in the CGL policy. The Court ruled that: 1) the auto exclusion was clear/unambiguous in excluding coverage arising from the "maintenance of any auto;" 2) the term "maintenance" in the standard auto exclusion is unambiguous and refers to vehicle repair/servicing activities; and 3) the auto exclusion applied to bar coverage for the premises liability claim because the claim "arose from" vehicle maintenance activities. ◆

Insurer entitled to reimbursement of settlement after second insurer wrongfully claimed excess priority position

Two insurers—Insurer A and Insurer B--were involved in an initial coverage dispute regarding the priority of liability coverages for a mutual insured in connection with an underlying wrongful death action. In the initial coverage action, Insurer B took the position that Insurer A was primary as to the first $3 million layer of coverage. After Insurer B prevailed before the trial court in the coverage action, and with trial in the wrongful death action looming, Insurer A settled the underlying wrongful death action within the $3 million layer. At the time of the settlement, Insurer A's appeal in the coverage action was pending. After the settlement, the Supreme Court of VA reversed the trial court and held that Insurer B was, in fact, primary.

Following the Supreme Court of VA's first ruling, Insurer A filed an equitable contribution action against Insurer B seeking reimbursement for the underlying settlement. Insurer B moved to dismiss the reimbursement action on two grounds: (1) It did not consent to the underlying wrongful death settlement, such that its policy's consent-to-settlement clause was breached; and (2) Insurer A's settlement amounted to a "voluntary payment" for which it was not entitled to reimbursement. The trial court agreed with Insurer B and granted Insurer B's motion to dismiss Insurer A's contribution action.

Upon appeal back to the Supreme Court of VA, Insurer A argued that the trial court erred because Insurer B had waived its consent-to-settlement clause by wrongfully disavowing its primary coverage obligations. Insurer A further argued that it did not act as a volunteer in light of the initial trial court's unfavorable ruling, and that the volunteer doctrine—an equitable doctrine-- was otherwise inapplicable because its application under the circumstances would be inequitable. The Supreme Court of VA ruled in favor of Insurer A, holding that Insurer B had waived its consent-to-settlement clause and that the volunteer doctrine did not bar reimbursement. ◆

FIRST PARTY COVERAGE DISPUTE RE: NATIONAL FLOOD INSURANCE PROGRAM POLICY

Insurer "Fiscal Agent" not "General Agent" to FEMA

The insured owns a beachside hotel in Oregon and was issued a Standard Flood Insurance Policy, pursuant to the National Flood Insurance Program, by a large insurance company. Following a surge of tidal water that impacted the lower level of the hotel, the insured submitted a proof of loss in support of its insurance claim. The proof of loss demanded a payment of approximately ninety-eight thousand dollars. The insurer issued payment for that amount but also issued a partial denial for damages sustained on the lower level of the hotel because a determination was made that the lower level constituted a "basement" under the policy and was subject to the restricted coverage provided for basements in the policy. The insured appealed the partial denial unsuccessfully and then eventually filed a civil action in the U.S. District Court for the District of Oregon seeking approximately four-hundred thousand dollars. At the time the civil action was filed, no supplemental proof of loss had been submitted to demand the four-hundred thousand amount. The insured moved for summary judgment on the arguments that the lower level was not a basement and that a supplemental proof of loss was not required because the adjuster had engaged in conduct that waived the requirement. The insurer filed a cross-motion for summary judgment arguing that the lower level was a basement and that the requirement for a supplemental proof of loss was not subject to waiver. Ruling for insurer, the trial court determined that the insurer is merely a "fiscal agent" for FEMA, not a "general agent", and, as such, cannot waive the proof of loss requirement, which is a condition precedent to suit. The basement issue was thus deemed moot.

On appeal, the Ninth Circuit affirmed the lower court's ruling, rejecting insured's argument that the proof of loss requirement should be set aside due to the alleged misstatements of the adjuster regarding the processing of the claim because "[n]one of the statements attributable to the insurer constitute 'affirmative misconduct going beyond mere negligence'" and courts may not impose estoppel against the government absent affirmative misconduct. ◆

CGL CLAIM AGAINST HOSPITAL ARISING OUT OF HURRICANE KATRINA

No evidence of injuries = no award for damages

Plaintiffs filed suit against a New Orleans hospital centering on the post-Katrina environment. The plaintiffs, family members of the decedent patient, claimed that the conditions in the hospital caused or exacerbated the decedent patient's preexisting health issues and caused or contributed to her death approximately one month after Hurricane Katrina. The plaintiffs sought damages in the amount of $800,000. The case was tried to the judge, who took the matter under advisement and entered a defense judgment in favor of the hospital with written reasons in January 2019, finding the hospital complied with all appropriate rules and regulations, finding no evidence of injuries to the decedent, and finding plaintiffs' experts not credible. Abuse of Process and Conspiracy Claims Dismissed Against Lawyers

Attorneys represented a Wife in a dissolution action. Following the divorce, an issue arose regarding the Husband's obligation to pay alimony. After the Wife, through counsel, sought to enforce the alimony, contentious litigation ensued but was ultimately resolved via mediation. After the mediation, the Husband filed suit against his now ex-Wife, her counsel and her accountant for malicious prosecution and conspiracy regarding the actions taken to enforce the unpaid alimony. After serving a Motion for Sanctions, the Husband amended the action to pursue claims for abuse of process and conspiracy. The Court ultimately dismissed the lawsuit with prejudice finding that all matters were resolved in the mediation, a lawyer cannot conspire with their client unless there is a personal stake in the illegal conduct separate from advancing the interests of the client, plaintiff could not plead or prevail on an abuse of process claim and the litigation privilege provided the lawyers immunity for abuse of process. Trial Court Cannot Review Decisions of Appellate Court

Clients sued a prominent attorney and his law firm for legal malpractice after the clients lost an appeal handled by the attorney. The final judgment against the clients, which was the subject of the appeal, was grounded on two separate and independent legal theories. The appellate court issued a per curiam affirmance ("PCA") without opinion upholding the final judgment against the clients. One of the legal theories upon which the final judgment was based was the subject of an unrelated appeal in the Florida Supreme Court pending at the time the intermediate appellate court issued its decision. After the intermediate appellate court issued the PCA, the Supreme Court changed the law as it existed at the time of the PCA. Plaintiffs claimed that the Defendant attorney was negligent by not advising the clients to seek to have the appellate court revisit the issue. Defendants filed a motion for summary judgment arguing that the Supreme Court's decision had no effect because the PCA was based on two separate and independent grounds and no subsequent court or jury could decide that the remaining basis alone was insufficient to support the PCA. The Court granted the motion and entered final judgment for the Defendants. Claims for fees and costs are pending. ◆

According to the claimant, the nursing staff failed to turn and reposition the resident, failed to treat the resident's skin breakdown timely, and failed to implement appropriate measures to reduce the resident's identified risk for skin breakdown. The claimant alleged that the nursing home's negligence resulted in pressure ulcer to the resident's sacrum, heels, elbows, feet, legs, and hands. OPIOID AND BENZODIAZEPINE PRESCRIPTION DRUG DEATH CASE

In a death case, Plaintiff daughter alleged that our primary care physician client negligently treated her 40-year-old father's chronic pain and severe anxiety with excessive and prolonged opioid and benzodiazepine prescriptions causing addiction and her father's ultimate death from hypothermia. Having not been heard from for three days, the man was discovered in a frigid mobile home with minimal vital signs from which he could not be resuscitated despite the copious administration of Narcan. Plaintiff's two well-established and credentialed expert witnesses opined that the root cause of the man's death was respiratory depression brought on by his opioid pain and anti-anxiety benzo medications. During the course of the week-long trial in Dauphin County the Defense called numerous fact witnesses and two expert witnesses in establishing that our client's prescription practices over a seven-year period were within standards of acceptable pain management care applicable at the time. It was further persuasively postulated that the event precipitating the man's hypothermic demise was his likely 'binge' use of crystal meth (a non-narcotic illicit stimulant drug) followed by a 'crash' phase resulting in overwhelming somnolence; explaining his frozen exposure. (In pre-trial discovery, it was learned that a hollow pen was found on the man's person which ME's Harrisburg trial defense team of Michael Badowski and Anthony Gabriel secured independent lab analysis revealing the interior presence of methamphetamine.) NEGLIGENCE CASE AGAINST DRIVER AND TRUCKING COMPANY

Trucking defendants exonerated: defense theory of sudden emergency. Plaintiffs punished for bloated medical bills.

The lawsuit arose from a multi-vehicle accident. Plaintiffs were traveling in the right lane of a highway that was under construction. There was an abandoned mattress blocking traffic in the right lane. Co-defendant (who settled pre-trial) was traveling behind plaintiffs and changed lanes to avoid Plaintiffs and the other stopped traffic. Co-defendant then stopped in the left lane directly in front of the oncoming tractor-trailer without leaving enough room for the truck driver to stop. The tractor-trailer driver attempted to move into the right lane, but Plaintiffs' vehicle was stopped in that lane. The driver "threaded the needle" and tried to go in-between both cars to avoid a direct impact on either. The truck driver struck the right rear of co-defendant's vehicle and the left rear of Plaintiffs' car. Plaintiffs sued the driver and the trucking company alleging the driver was negligent in the operation of a vehicle, including speeding and failing to keep a proper lookout. Plaintiffs settled with the other defendants before trial. Plaintiffs' counsel argued that the truck driver was originally in the right lane behind them and co-defendant and that when co-defendant changed lanes, the truck driver was travelling too fast to stop. The truck driver argued that he was in the left lane the entire time and co-defendant cut him off and stopped abruptly in his lane.

Plaintiffs requested $3.5 million from the jury.

Defense counsel was able to point out multiple instances of inconsistencies with the medical care including double and triple billing for the same procedure on the same day, as well as treatment for a prior accident attributed to the accident at issue. Additionally, the defense accident reconstruction expert was able to establish that the truck driver was in the left lane and attempted to swerve into the right contrary to Plaintiffs' allegations.

Motion Practice – Don't Overlook It!

Plaintiff sued a trucking company and its driver after he drifted onto the shoulder of an interstate highway at 2:30 a.m. and drove under the rear of the defendants' tractor trailer at high speed. The plaintiff miraculously survived, but sustained catastrophic injuries requiring dozens of surgical procedures. He had nearly $1.6MM in medical bills and significant wage and earning capacity damages, to go along with a massive "non-economic damages" claim and loss of parental consortium claims brought by his two minor children. The defendant driver had stopped on the shoulder to sleep after finding a nearby rest area full, in had parked in an area designated "emergency parking only". The plaintiff sued under negligence and recklessness theories, and claimed he was in the shoulder because he had hit black ice. After removing the case to federal court, the defendants filed a motion to dismiss the recklessness counts for failure to state a claim, and this motion was granted. After targeting depositions and expert discovery at the plaintiff's comparative negligence (he was intoxicated at the time of the accident and told police at the scene that he must have fallen asleep at the wheel), the defendants moved for summary judgment on the remaining negligence claims. In addition to gathering ample expert and lay witness testimony refuting the plaintiff's claims, a key argument was that a plaintiff cannot create a genuine issue of material fact to withstand summary judgment through only his own self-serving deposition testimony, when such testimony is contradicted by all other admissible evidence. The District Court agreed with the defendants and entered summary judgment in their favor. ◆

Lawsuit sought $10,000,000 in damages. Plaintiff argued that his claim was based on negligence in the performance of a proprietary function, municipal water supply, but the Supreme Court held that the City's provision and maintenance of fire hydrants is an immune governmental function. It also noted, citing prior cases, that "to the extent that this governmental function coincides with the City's proprietary functions in Massenburg's surviving allegations, 'the governmental function is the overriding factor' and the doctrine of sovereign immunity will shield the locality from liability." It therefore affirmed a final judgment based on an order sustaining a demurrer to plaintiff's amended complaint.

"Actual Notice" Required in School Sexual Misconduct Case

On December 20, 2019, the Circuit Court granted summary judgment in favor of the Defendant Board of Education (the "Board") in twelve consolidated cases arising out of the sexual misconduct of a former school system employee and volunteer. Of particular note, in ruling on the plaintiffs' claims under Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, 20 U.S.C. § 1681 et seq. ("Title IX"), the court concluded that the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals' decision in Baynard v. Malone, 268 F.3d 228 (4th Cir. 2001), cert. denied, 535 U.S. 954 (2002), remains good law within the Fourth Circuit despite it being rejected in other federal appellate circuits, and, applying the standard set forth in Baynard, which requires "actual notice" of the abuse in question as opposed to actual notice of a substantial risk of abuse, the court concluded that the Board did not act with deliberate indifference once an "appropriate person" possessed actual notice of the former employee's/volunteer's abuse. The court also granted summary judgment in the Board's favor on the plaintiffs' intentional tort claims, state constitutional claims, and negligent hiring claims. As such, only several negligence-based claims against the Board survive, which the Board contends are subject to a damages' cap pursuant to the Board's entitlement to sovereign immunity.

A third boy became an intermediary between the teacher and the two other boys when the teacher wouldn't stop trying to communicate with them, mainly through direct messaging on Instagram. The 17-year-old reported the sex act to administrators and police and the schoolteacher was dismissed, arrested and pled guilty. The three boys charged the School Board with negligent supervision, claiming that the District should have known that the teacher posed a threat to students because she began to dress more suggestively both at school and during football workouts, where she led core-conditioning drills. The students also claimed that the teacher used her role as a teacher and yearbook coordinator to call the students out of class repeatedly, which should have alerted school personnel to potential improper behavior. Finally, the plaintiffs also claimed that the teacher's husband, also an English teacher at the high school, knew or should have known about his wife's proclivities because their marriage was failing, and he observed that she appeared to enjoy the attention of boys at the school. BODILY INJURY – MOTORCYCLE ACCIDENT

Client's Truck Did Not Cause Accident

The firm represented a landscaping company that was working at an apartment complex in the college town of Auburn, AL. Because the parking lot was full, the truck parked parallel to the apartment building which took up a lane of travel. The plaintiff was an Auburn University student who had left his apartment to go study at the library. Because it can be difficult to find a parking space, he took his motorcycle instead of driving. As he was headed north out of the apartment complex another resident was heading west and started making a left turn into the plaintiff's path just past the client's truck. As a result, the plaintiff was struck by the oncoming car resulting in serious injuries, including a broken leg that required multiple surgeries. In addition, he was forced to quit school for nearly a year while he recuperated from his injuries. The plaintiff blamed the truck for blocking his view and forcing him into the opposite lane of travel in order to go around the truck and criticized the client for not using cones or finding a safer place to park the truck.

In defense of the landscaping company, Mr. Turner relied on the trial pad program to emphasize important photographs that showed the area where the accident occurred. During cross examination, he was able to quickly impeach the plaintiff in several areas of his testimony by utilizing the programs word search. With multiple parties and voluminous documents crammed into a small courtroom, use of trial technology allowed Mr. Turner to efficiently defend his client.

PERSONAL INJURY – TRAUMATIC BRAIN INJURY

Credibility is Everything

Plaintiff (38-year-old female) was injured in a series of three car accidents over a six month period, the last of which was moderately severe. We represented the driver involved in the second accident, which was a minor "tap" at a stop light. Plaintiff claimed she suffered a mild traumatic brain injury with severe, permanent cognitive effects as a result of the combination of all three accidents, as well as permanent back and shoulder pain. At the time of the accident, Plaintiff was working as a paralegal with aspirations to restart law school. Two years after the accident, Plaintiff started law school and also became gainfully employed as a paralegal at a large multinational tech corporation. At trial, Plaintiff claimed that her pain limited her ability to do any meaningful activity and that her cognitive difficulties, including her memory, recall, attention, and processing, were so severe that she had to take an indefinite leave of absence from law school and was even at risk of losing her job, which justified asking the jury for approximately $975,000 in damages. The case was tried against all three defendants, plus Plaintiff's UIM carrier as an intervenor. The jury awarded Plaintiff a total of $67,000 (including $1,000 to each of her minor children involved in the first and third accidents) because they were able to observe her during the trial and during her testimony, in which she exhibited little to no pain behaviors and near-perfect, but very selective, recall of details and information. Further, the team of defense experts all testified that Plaintiff exhibited tell-tale signs of malingering and secondary gain. Of the total award, the jury allocated $60,000 to the third accident, $5,000 to the first accident for diminished value of her vehicle, and $0 in damages to the

MOTOR HOME BREACH OF WARRANTY CASE

Federal Judge returns only nominal damages to Plaintiffs

Plaintiffs alleged over twenty manufacturing defects in their 2016, 37-foot diesel motor home and filed suit under various breach of warranty theories, while seeking attorney fees under the Magnuson-Moss Federal Warranty Act. Plaintiffs sought rescission of the contract or repurchase of the vehicle, demanding that the manufacturer buy back their motor coach for over $200,000. Plaintiffs also asserted claims for violation of consumer protection laws, negligence, and bailment, alleging that the vehicle had been damaged in transit while in the possession of the manufacturer. After 4 days of trial in Federal Court, the District Judge ruled that the manufacturer did not have to buy back the coach, and only had to pay damages for two minor "warranty" items totaling $1,270. On the bailment claim (spider cracking in the headlight area), the court found that the coach was damaged while in transit upon delivery to the Plaintiffs in Wisconsin, awarding $6,000 (3,000 for repairs, and 3,000 loss in value), for a total damage award of $7,270. After the trial, Plaintiffs sought their attorney fees under Mag-Moss in the amount of $77,000, and after extensive briefing, the Court awarded only $2,307.66 in attorney fees. The total damage award, including atty fees, was $9,577.66. ◆

PRODUCT LIABILITY AND DECEPTIVE TRADE PRACTICES CLAIM AGAINST TRAILER MANUFACTURER/DEALERSHIP

No Mold Injury, No Conspiracy, No Recovery

Plaintiff sued the manufacturer and the retail dealership of a new travel trailer alleging that the trailer was defective due to alleged water intrusion and toxic mold growth. She also alleged the dealership failed to disclose, and actively concealed, both the existence of mold as well as various other alleged pre-sale defects. Steve Yoshida tried the case for the dealership, with the assistance of Tom Purcell. The trial took several interesting twists and turns, as plaintiff changed her theory in response to rulings by the court. Plaintiff claimed, among other things, that mold in the trailer had caused her to suffer a litany of health problems, including asthma, seizure-like episodes, and cognitive decline. However, the judge ruled early on plaintiff could not pursue any mold-related personal injuries because her mold "expert" did not have the requisite medical expertise. In addition, the defendants introduced evidence that plaintiff had been suffering from many of her alleged injury symptoms for years prior to her supposed mold exposure. Plaintiff continued to push the mold narrative, even after her personal injury claims were dismissed. However, her focus turned to the sale and inspection practices of the dealership. Plaintiff accused the dealership of various unlawful business practices and coverups. During an extremely animated closing argument, plaintiff's attorney declared that the dealership's personnel should be jailed and be forced to pay $100,000,000 for their conduct. The jury was not

WRONGFUL FORECLOSURE, EVICTION AND EJECTMENT

Court of Appeals AWOPs Claim Preclusion Argument Arising from Multiple Lawsuits

The case involved "wrongful foreclosure" and statutory deceptive trade practices claims against a national banking institution. The borrower defaulted on his mortgage loan for a vacation property on Mt. Hood, Oregon. The property was foreclosed by a foreclosure law firm, which then brought an eviction action against the defendant. The foreclosing lender lost at the eviction trial due to several missteps including, most significantly, relying on outdated statutory forms during the foreclosure. The foreclosure law firm recorded a number of corrective deeds to cure the foreclosure defects and then filed a new ejectment action, instead of a second eviction action. Unfortunately, all of the corrective documents had defects as well, prompting the borrower to assert counterclaims for wrongful foreclosure and violations of Oregon's Unlawful Trade Practices Act. The bank then asked MB Law Group to take over. After curing all of the foreclosure firm's errors, MB Law Group obtained summary judgment on all claims, including an award of over $30,000 for attorney's fees defeating the Unlawful Trade Practices Act counterclaims.

The borrower appealed arguing, among other things, that the eviction claim was barred by res judicata because the bank already lost at trial on the eviction claim. Michael J. Farrell and Stephen P. Yoshida were on the briefs for the bank and Michael J. Farrell argued the appeal to the Oregon Court of Appeals on behalf of the bank. The court of appeals issued an order affirming the case without opinion ("AWOP"). Notably, the same borrower/attorneys

Bank Overcomes Twenty-One Affirmative Defenses and Six Counterclaims

The defendant stopped paying her mortgage (including taxes and insurance) in 2011. She then rented the house out and moved to Pennsylvania and has since received over $100,000 in rental income. After a foreclosure firm filed for judicial foreclosure, defendant raised twenty-one affirmative defenses and six counterclaims relating to fraud in entering the loan, trespass, violations of numerous federal and state loan servicing laws, and other contract, statutory, and tort claims. The bank asked MB Law Group to take over the defense of those claims. After the borrower and her attorney refused to discuss any sort of reasonable settlement, the bank moved for summary judgment. Michael J. Farrell argued the case for the bank. The court granted all of the bank's motions for summary judgment and denied all of the defendants' motions. The case is currently on appeal. ◆

PREMISES LIABILITY / SLIP AND FALL WITH SPINE SURGERY RECOMMENDATION

Superior Knowledge Cannot Be Inferred with The Unnoticeable

Plaintiff sued a nationwide convenience store operator in a case involving a slip in fall on an alleged puddle of a "slick, oily substance" on the sidewalk in front of a convenience store entrance. Plaintiff claimed injuries including: an acute partial left rotator cuff tear with surgical repair and recommendations for a C5/6-C6/7 cervical discectomy.

Georgia trial courts typically reject efforts to obtain summary judgment in foreign substance premises liability cases. However, at deposition we were able to get the plaintiff to admit that despite her efforts to look where she was walking at the time of the incident, the alleged foreign substance was "unnoticeable." In light of plaintiff's admission that the alleged substance was "unnoticeable" prior to the fall, we argued that the plaintiff failed to establish that defendant's employees could have easily seen and removed the alleged substance. The court agreed with our arguments and found that plaintiff failed to prove superior knowledge and that constructive knowledge could not be inferred in light of plaintiff's testimony. ◆

NEGLIGENT MAINTENANCE OF A LIFT AGAINST PREMISES OWNER

Trial Court Erred in Denying Summary Judgement to defense in Death Case

A lift was installed for handicapped residents to travel from the mezzanine/lobby level to the street level, approved by a New York City Department of Buildings' Elevator Inspector.

At the time of the accident, the plaintiff's decedent was operating a scooter. It was alleged that the lift malfunctioned, dropping suddenly and the door "flying open" prior to safely descending to the ground, causing the plaintiff to fall out.

In reversing the trial court, the Appellate Court held that the defense was able to show its entitlement to judgment as a matter of law through submission of evidence demonstrating that they did not have notice of any malfunction of the door, including service records which showed there was no issue relating to the door opening prematurely. ◆

PREMISES LIABILITY CLAIM AGAINST GROCERY STORE

No need to call defense witnesses if plaintiff fails to prove case

Plaintiff filed a premises liability lawsuit against a local grocery store alleging injuries resulting from a slip and fall accident in the store. The case was tried to the judge. The plaintiff testified as to the mechanics of her fall and as to her subsequent medical treatment generally. However, plaintiff's counsel elicited no testimony establishing the store had notice of the alleged condition on the floor (a "quarter-sized drop of water"). Specifically, defendants introduced maintenance and inspection logs detailing the store's clean up and visual inspection occurring just 20 minutes before the fall. Additionally, the surveillance video which was admitted and played at trial demonstrated multiple customers walking through the subject area without incident. At the close of plaintiff's case, defense counsel moved for involuntary dismissal, arguing the plaintiff failed to meet her burden of establishing notice or a causal link between the claimed injuries and the fall. The court granted the motion, dismissing plaintiff's claims with prejudice and at plaintiff's cost. ◆

Jury Discards Patron's Negligence Claim

Plaintiff, a customer of a vehicle & implement repair facility, was injured as he approached the repair facility in order to retrieve products purchased from the facility. Plaintiff claimed serious injuries to his arm resulting in a complex three-part fracture and substantial monetary damages. The injury was allegedly the result of slipping upon ice that was upon the property in near proximity to a drainage gutter from the facility's roof. The parties were unable to reach any amicable agreement. The claim proceeded through litigation and to a jury trial with the repair facility, amongst other things, disputing any liability for plaintiff's claimed injuries. Following a trial in which witnesses were called including individuals upon the property at the time of plaintiff's alleged injury, responding police officials, and expert medical providers, the jury returned a verdict finding no liability on the part of the repair facility and wholly discarding plaintiff's claim. There were no further post-trial motions or appeals upon agreement amongst the parties that the repair facility would not seek to recover costs associated with the successful trial presentation. ◆

PLACENTAL ABRUPTION – WRONGFUL DEATH CLAIM AGAINST PHYSICIANS, COMMUNITY CLINIC AND HOSPITAL

Failure to designate patient with prior placental abruption as "high risk" did not constitute negligence

Plaintiff sued her obstetrical health care providers subsequent to an acute placental abruption that resulted in the death of her 36-week-old fetus.

Plaintiff's Maternal Fetal Medicine specialist testified that the physicians and certified nurse midwife were negligent when they failed to designate the patient as "high risk" due to her previous placental abruption. Plaintiff also claimed that the providers were negligent for failing to document plaintiff's complaints of abdominal pain and failure to send her to the hospital, in light of her complaints, in the days leading up to the abruption.

The critical issue with regard to the designation of "high risk" became whether or not such a designation would have made a difference in the type of care received and would that change in care have saved the life of the baby.

With regards to the issue of communication, the clinic documented the plaintiff's prior placental abruption—with an urgent cesarean section—during her previous pregnancy. All the providers testified that they knew about the prior placental abruption during their treatment of the plaintiff. Although Plaintiff testified that she
